

Congolese refugees in Kenya receive an education through one of CWR's six new projects.

New Projects Promote Community Transformation

Covenant World Relief has six new projects: mobile medical clinics in Burma, education and community development in East Asia, agricultural training and support in Ecuador, agriculture in Haiti, education for refugees in Kenya, and education in Thailand.

Mobile medical clinics in Burma provide basic medical care and disease prevention to the Karen people who face persecution. In East Asia, young people are being trained in community development principles and are carrying out projects in their neighborhoods.

The agriculture project in Ecuador will equip the community to grow mushrooms that are not dependent on pesticides. This will provide a more stable source of income and improve the health of the entire community. In Fond-des-Blancs, Haiti, a new project will create an environment that enables farmers to multiply their current harvest.

In Kenya, the education project for Congolese refugees in partnership with the Evangelical Covenant Church of Kenya continues. A new residential tutorial learning center in Thailand will provide after-school and weekend learning opportunities for 32 students.
